The area for the fort was 80 rods square, lying between what is now First West and Fourth West Streets and 2nd North and 5th North Streets.

Within that fort area the company of men built their houses close together, with sufficient openings to let their stock in and out. The houses were built with green cottonwood logs that were cut on the river bottoms.

way was soon laid out with a public square in the center and ample city blocks surrounding the square.

Then began the work of "forting in." Around the central square some 75 primitive dirt-roofed log cabins sprang into existence, some abutting against each other, while between others were erected strong panels of upright posts. In this manner an impregnable wall was formed around the square. Small windows were provided at strategic points to serve as portholes in case of attack. Life in the new fort-string was conducted under military law, with officers and picket patrols acting at the call of the bugler, John Watkins.

Fort Midway brought to the people a sense of well provided security, and by bringing them close together helped develop a new happiness and community spirit. Fortunately, the fort was never attacked, though the settlers were ready to defend their lives and homes at any time. The fact that the fort was not molested speaks highly of the ability of the pioneers to cooperate in community projects.

The first 75 families in the old fort and their locations are as follows:

To My Pioneer Parents

I pray thee Lord to help me climb
The path my parents trod,
Each day they did their best
And put their trust in God.

As they journeyed on their way
They had many a bitter loss
It never dimmed their faith in thee
As they carried along their cross.

So help me give my children
The faith my parents gave me
That when we meet on the other shore
Not one will missing be.

Help me to guide their footsteps
Along life's slippery lane
That they may not fall and cause them
Years of remorse and shame.

May they climb steadily upward
Till they reach the throne of God
And I know they will if they follow
The path my parents trod.
